AD LECTOREM

The Baworowsky Library in Lviv was one of the major privately funded libraries in the period of the Partitions of Poland. Its was founded by a count Wiktor Baworowski (1826–1894), Prus II Wilczekosy coat of arms; a translator of Western-European literature into Polish, and a bibliophile¹, renowned for his eccentric behavior. His collection has its onset in Myszkowice estate near Tarnopol. Since 1857, taking Józef Ossoliński as an example, Baworowski aspired to open an entail². In 1861 Baworowski placed his book collection in an inherited building of the former Sieniawski Arsenal in Lviv, where he established a sort of library – museum which, apart from precious Polish material, held also the Slavic one, as well as a print collection, sculptures, paintings, and other relics of the former culture of the Republic of Poland. Owing to the assistance offered by a well-known collector Aleksander Batawski, Baworowski obtained whole book collections or most valuable fragments, particularly those concerning the history of Poland, among others, collections of Aleksander and Stanisław Stadnicki of Żmigród, Ewaryst and Józef Kuropatnicki, Ambroży Grabowski, Alojzy Osiński, Kazimierz Stronczyński, Leon Dembowski of Klimontowice, Dionizy Zubrzycki, and Jan Wincenty Bandtkie-Stężyński. In 1856 the library had six thousand Polish Works, three thousand foreign ones, as well as five hundred manuscripts.³ Henryk Schmitt, who began working on a catalogue of engravings and the regulations of the book collection, took care of them. Schmitt's work was continued by other librarians, Wojciech Kętrzyński among others, who registered historiographic works in the collection, as well as works by Stanisław Orzechowski, Szymon Starowolski, sermons and funeral speeches, and also works on grammar and lexicology, literature, theology, and herbaria.

In 1894, after the death of the founder, the collection held 15,571 old prints, and over one thousand manuscripts, particularly in belles-lettres, politics, law, liturgy, theology, and mathematics and natural sciences, which – aside from other sources – came from private collections. In his will from 1881 Baworowski bequeathed the library to “the property of the land of Galicia and Lodomeria,” while the established Library of the Count Wiktor Baworowski Foundation in Lviv became administrated by the National Department (a unit of the Diet of the Kingdom of Galicia).

In 1914, a collection of count Zygmunt Czarnecki⁴, the grandson of the library's founder (1905), an incisor Regni Antoni Czarnecki, was purchased (for 180 thousand marks, with a provision of indivisibility), holding 6,435 works coming from various collections, for example, from castellan Bieliński or Aleksy Prusinowski. This collection consisted in thirty-eight incunabula, one thousand and a half of old prints, numerous manuscripts on the Polish law, history, books on mathematics and astronomy, religious prints (a collection of the oldest missals of the Cracow and Poznań dioceses, as well as copies of the Holy Bible, acts of synods). Among them, there were valuable and unique prints, which concerned religious matters in Poland and abroad, especially polemic and dissident literature.

In the year 1900, the Library Count Wiktor Baworowski Foundation, after having been made accessible to the public, became a significant research center (since 1901 it functioned under Rudolf Kotula management⁵).

Under occupation, the library collections disseminated – they were included into the Lviv Branch of the Library of the Academy of Sciences in USSR collection. Afterwards, the collections were made part of the II Branch of Staatsbibliothek Lemberg, which already included the Ossolineum Library. Part of the documents was handed over to Cracow⁶, and then to Lower Silesia; however, these days, part of the collection is, among other places, in the National Library in Warsaw. Nonetheless, since 1945 the foundations of the collection (with valuable collections from the 16th century⁷) have been stored in the Lviv National Wasył Stefaniuk Scientific Library of Ukraine (LNSL).

In the 16th century, in the reign of the Jagiellonian dynasty, the Republic of Poland enjoyed a period of prosperity in many areas of economic and social life, whereas an active participation in the public and cultural spheres was possible due to education, which was implemented with due respect to the humanistic ideals. The most prominent academic center at that time was Cracow, referred to by Enea Silvio as the Polish Athens⁸. Among the alumni of the Cracow Academy, there were a great number of eminent politicians, writers, and columnists. The intellectual elite of the country focused on the Wawel court, while bishops' and magnates' courts were significant centers of humanistic culture. An expression of the intellectual atmosphere of the "golden era" of the Republic of Poland was, for example, a cultural patronage, which, among others, took care of the editorial initiatives and also of the editing processes of particular texts⁹ that often promoted works in the mother tongue¹⁰. Contacts with the European centers were maintained by cooperation between Polish humanists and a number of the European authors, translators, philologists, or publishers¹¹. They were also proved by publication of the Renaissance printers¹². Not only were the Cracow printers well-informed in the then contemporary European book market, but they adjusted their publishing program to the needs of the readership of both scholastic as well as humanistic writings¹³. Furthermore, they participated in the formation of the editorial elements of the book that reveal relations between writers and readers¹⁴.

The formation of the unique *res publica literarum*¹⁵ is depicted by the prints from the first half of the 16th century, recorded in the catalogue, belonging both to the literature of the seven liberal arts that prepared to studies in the fields of philosophy and theology, and to the then shaping humanistic writing.

The Renaissance idea of man, particularly the search for answers to existential questions led the then contemporary writers to draw from the spiritual legacy of antique, as well as to the Judeo-Christian culture. What was published at that time were the texts in Greek-Roman tradition, and Cicero, Demosthenes, Homer, Ovid, Plutarch, Plato, Seneca, Euripides, Titus Flavius Josephus, Persius Flaccus, and other propagators, for example, Jan of Oświęcim – one of the first proponents of humanism in the Cracow Academy. The developing biblical studies and patristics were signs of the rejuvenation of Christian life and the Church, as well as they contributed to the emergence of the positive theology that served to defend faith¹⁶. Pope Leo X's bulla treated about this „matter,” as well as a postulate of Erasmus of Rotterdam (1465–1526) illustrates its definition: *purificatio Ecclesiae et cordis*¹⁷, being a vision of the evangelical Christian faith, whose realization was dictated in the new editions of scriptures of the Church Fathers. It was also in accordance with the views represented by Lawrence Valla (ca 1407–1457), a propagator of classical Latin and author of Elegantiarum libri omnes, among other oeuvres. Aside from works by Erasmus of Rotterdam, among writings penned by eminent philologists, there were also texts by Rudolphus Agricola (Huysman), conversant in Greek and Hebrew, an ardent advocate of classical studies, which he formulated in his oeuvre, entitled De inventione dialectica. Particularly popular in antiquity were grammar books by Aelius Donat, and by Jan of Stobnica, Theobald Billican, or Michael Falkner. Jan of Głogów was the author of the 16th century grammar book Minoris Donati de octo partibus orationis compendiosa interpretatio; while Laurentius Corvinus was renowned for his coursebook to classical style, which at the same time was the “hymn” in favor of Cracow. Studies devoted to rhetoric paved the way for a participation in many important forms of public life. Moreover, it started to be regarded as a vital element of humanistic education: orator est vir bonus, dicendi peritus (Cato Major). A treaty by Jan Szklarek (of Dobczyce), theologian, conversant in canonical law, and a preacher, who edited a coursebook that was a companion to studies adjusted to the Polish recipient¹⁸.

Publications of the Church Fathers belonged to classic works, for example, Philosophiae naturalis Isagoge, published by Jan Haller, as well as texts by Albertus Magnus, a Dominican known as doctor universalis, who in Aristotle's oeuvres perceived a possibility of reconciliation of scientific knowledge and faith. This group of writings can also have Orationes by Basil of Caesarea and De communione Eucharistiae penned by Ioannes Chrysostomus (“golden-mouthed”). These two writers, along with Gregory of Nazianzus, were regarded as most eminent Fathers of the Church. Saint Bonaventure (Giovanni Fidenza), a theologian, philosopher scholastic, the eighth general of the Franciscans was also referred to as doctor seraphicus. Bonaventure edited the acts of his own order and was the author of two biographies of Saint Francis (Legenda maior s. Francisci and Legenda minor s. Francisci). Also, Breviloquium Bonaventurae edited by Rudolphus Agricola was very well-known at that time. However, Pseudo-Bonaventure is considered to have worked on the popular Meditationes Vitae Christi. Polish editions were edited by Baltazar Opeć (Balthazar de Cracovia) and published in 1552 in Jan Haller's Printing House, bearing the title Żywot pana Jesu Krista (A Life of Jesu Krist), with a preface by Jan Sandecki, as well as Żywot wszechmocnego syna bożego pana Jesu Krista (A Life of the Almighty Son of God Jesu Krist) by Hieronim Wietor.

Hermeneutic (exegetic) literature, which aimed at understanding the sense of the Bible in the West, began to develop in the 4th century. It was the time, when more eminent commentators of the Bible started to emerge, whereas exegetic writings were penned by most outstanding writers of the patrological period; their form was diversified to a great extent, that is, it ranged from typical scientific treatises to accessible homilies. Within this group, there are texts of theoretical and doctrinal nature (speculative theology), as well as of practical and moral one (practical and moral theology).

Apart from the above-mentioned editions, postillas also gained popularity, which commented on particular books of the Old and New Testaments, for instance, psalms (Jan van Campen, Andrzej Krzycki), Epistles (Michael Falkener, Stanisław Leopolda). A bishop Andreas de Escobar (1348–1448), a doctor of theology and a papal confessor, was known for his bucolic writings, such as Confessio minor, De decimis, Canones penitentiales. In 1535, his popular coursebook Contenta hoc libello modus confitendi, with exegesis, examples and canons for confessors, was published by Maciej Szarffenberg. Numerous marginalia prove its readership reception. Similar works, directed to preachers and confessors, were published by Jakub of Tuchów, Mikołaj of Błonie (Nicolaus Var-saviensis), Jan of Oświęcim, Walentyn of Poznań, while Mateusz of Kościan published Cohortacio Samaticarum Ecclesiarum ad antiquae et avitae religionis observationem.

In speculative theology, writings by representatives of early scholasticism and late medieval authors were collected. The most renowned and thus most popular scholastic oeuvre, which laid the foundations for lectures in theology in the Middle Ages, were Sententiae penned by Peter Lombard, which were commented on in the Renaissance as well, for example by Michael Falkener. Among philosophical texts, numerous editions of Aristotle's works, along with commentaries, should be mentioned at the beginning. From the 16th century Cracow editions of Aristotle's works, the following have been found in the book collection, Trium librorum de anima Aristotelis familiaris exposition, edited by Florian Ungler, Logica vetus and Textus elenchorum, as well as monographs by Pietro Roselli, Jacob Fabri or Michael Falkener. Moreover, texts by Duns Scotus and Albertus Magnus had their commentaries written.

A considerable collection was also that of controversial literature, both by the proponents of the Catholic wing and other faiths, such as Stanisław Byliński, Jan Cochlaeus, John Eck, Andrzej Krycki, or Thomas de Vio. Filippo Archinto (1500–1558), the archbishop of Milan, a theologian, lawyer, and papal diplomat, was also the author of several critical treaties. His Christianium de fide et sacramentis dictum was regarded as best lecture in faith as well as best polemical work by befriended Johannes Dantiscus. Thus, Stanislaus Hosius was delegated to prepare a Polish edition, which would be published in 1545; however, under a slightly changed title that would emphasize the role of the publication Christiana de FIDE et sacramentis contra haereticorum id temporis errores explanatio. This coursebook was supposed to serve as a catechism in the diocese subordinate to Dantiscus.

New religious ideas generated lively interest in the Cracow center. Andrzej Frycz Modrzewski made references to disputes that he was engaged in with friends in 1546¹⁹. Aside from texts by Modrzewski (and his adversaries), the volume also comprises writings by the initiators of the Protestant camp led by Martin Luther (and his opponent Johann Cochlaeus, and in Poland – Marcin Kromer). Worth seeing is the first Lutheran text, published for the purpose of people dwelling in the Dutchy of Prussia. Albrecht Hohenzollern (1490–1568), the last grand master of the Teutonic Knights, and the first Duke of Prussia, become known as an advocate and a protector of Lutheranism, which he became interested in 1521, whereas in 1525 he definitely broke with Catholicism. For the purpose of the new religion, Albrecht formed an administrative, political, and religious organization (Landeskirchentum), which is depicted in the 1544 edition of the Act on the supreme power of the glory of God (Ustawa o zwierzchniei chwale Bozej). In the first decree on page one, Albrecht emphasizes that after the inspection of “all [Prussian] states and districts,” he sees a need for settling church matters, “[...] so as all matter [...] is kindly and justly handled, and the servants of our Lord Jesus Christ and His holy word, just and necessary food were given [...] for the spreading of his glory and true teachings.” Owing to the collaboration between bishops, theologians, and preachers, standardization act was prepared, with regard to acts on the land assembly from the year 1525, and then under penalty for not abiding, forwarded to the followers to their “unvarying and uniform behavior.” The text was not only published for the purpose of the “education of the common man,” but also read four weeks before “the town of catechism” was introduced. Its significance was strengthened by a letter from their superiors, which concerned the range of being effective and the nature of the proposed ceremonies as well. They referred to the patterns of behavior during mass, absolution, and teachings on murderers, funeral, and also common prayers. An expression of particular care of the correctness of the edition is the errata, placed at the end, along with the explanation of mistakes, “the printer would not know a word in Polish.” In Królewiec Albrecht initiated publication of first reformation works in Polish (in 1535–1567 eighty-one titles were released), books in Latin and German were offered to Sigismund Augustus as well²⁰. The university in Królewiec, established in 1544, favored the dissemination of the Protestant faith. Tolerance towards other faiths was characteristic of Polish Christianity in the Renaissance²¹. However, books published at that time were very useful to all Christians. They were directed to the followers of Judaism, who “regard themselves a liberated nation, curse Christians, speak foul of them, think them rejected by God, not knowing their own condemnation”²².

Asceticism, mystics, hagiography were represented by works written by eminent masters and theoreticians of the spiritual life, such as, for example, Bernard of Clairvaux. Polish saints were in focus, which proved the publication of the life of Saint Stanislaus (Vita s. Stanislai) edited by Jan Długosz, and also The Life of Saint Casimir. Close to this vein was also secular historiography with a leading figure of Maciej of Miechów, the author of Chronica Polonorum and Tractatus de duabus Sarmatiis Asiana et Europiana et de contentis in eis.

Filippo Buonaccorsi (Philippus Callimachus Experiens, Bonaccursius), an Italian humanist, was the author of The life of Władysław of Varna, while Sigismund von Herberstein, an envoy to Poland and the Grand Dutchy of Moscow, committed his Russian experiences on pages of Commentari della Moscovia et parimente della Russia. From antique history Leonardo Bruni (Aretino) translated Xenophon's Historia rerum gestarum in Graecia and the Austrian diplomat and historian edited the history of Roman emperors.

The 16th century was the time of the increase in legislative activity of the Polish church, which resulted in reforms brought about on provincial synods (from 1510 to 1577) as well as diocesan ones. Archbishop Jan Łaski called fifteen synods whose purpose was, among other things, to protect the “purity of faith”²³; however, a sign of his legislative activity and his connections with the court are, for example, Co[m]mune incliti Polonie Regni privilegium co[n]stitution [et] indultu[m] publicitus decretorum approbatoru[m]q[ue], as well as a speech delivered by pope Leo X. The teaching and exegesis of the creed, which was emphasized during the Council of Trent, were based on catechisms²⁴, whereas copies of Mass books, breviaries, directoria, and psalters were prepared for liturgical needs. The missals of the Poznań and Gniezno diocese belong to most interesting ones, as they are printed on parchment, ornamented with initials and fleurons. Psalters are unique as well, for example those edited by Walenty Wróbel, printed by Florian Ungler, Hieronim Wietor and Maciej Scharffenberg, with a preface by Andrzej Glaber of Kobylin, Professor of the Cracow Academy.

Moreover, translation of books on household management and agriculture of Pietro de Crescenzi (1230–1320/21)²⁵ – an Italian agronomist and physician who described his experience in this matter²⁶ – were attributed to this author. It is worth paying attention to Polish vocabulary²⁷ used in the translation, most probably by Andrzej Trzeciecki. Among popular prints, there were also: herbaria by Odo Magdunensis, for example, Artium et medicinae doctora, which was provided with names and interpretations derived from the Polish herbarium; the first herbarium in the Polish language by Falimir, as well as a coursebook (a collection of medical advice) Regimen sanitatis medicorum Parisiensium by Franciscus Mymerus; works in medicine, for example by Henricus Cornelius Agrippa ab Netteshym (1486–1535). This doctor of law, historian, alchemist also studied theology, medicine, literature (he was conversant in eight languages); however, Agrippa was particularly interested in astrology (published calendars), esoteric, and occultism. Since 1522, Agrippa was practicing as a physician, and also as a “tsarist physician.” In 1528, he fought the plague in Antwerp. His experiences were made part of his work, which was published by Maciej Scharffenberg in 1543 – Krótką nauką rządzenia ku ustrzeżeniu od zarażenia powietrza (A Short History of Rule to Warn Against the Contamination of the Air). A fear of epidemic, common at that time in Europe, also reached Poland. Hence there occurred the need of this edition, which was published in hope to “rule and behave in a due way, or in contaminating to safe life with God’s help.” Aside from the descriptions of meals and drinks, accompanied with the necessary annotation “The Almighty made medicine from the earth, and a wise man shall not restrain from hay,” the author illustrates “a custom of letting blood in such an adventure,” in this way stressing that “much depends on that.” This procedure referred to then contemporary concept of the reasons for falling ill. The Renaissance natural history gradually liberated from metaphysics and poesy at that time. However, it was not until at the close of the 16th century that more systematic and uniform research was conducted in this matter. Nonetheless, it was Andreas Vesalius who made careful, anatomical observations, independently of Galen. His works proposed entirely new perspective on anatomy and rectified former views.

In the analyzed collection, several well-known editions of mathematical and astronomical works were found, for example, by Petrus de Alliaco, Baltazar Licht’s Algoritmus linealis, or Theoriae novae planetarum by Jerzy Peurbach (Purbach); works by Jan Blanchin, Mikołaj Prugner, Sebastian Münster’s Horologographia, or works by Jan of Stobnica. „Disciplina numerorum arithmetica est” – these words begin the treaty Algorithmus, which makes references to Aristotelian teachings, written probably in 1491, for the year was regarded in the text as annus currens. Under the influence of the European humanists, theological and philosophical thought²⁸, as well as works in mathematics, astronomy, law, and historiography were developing in Poland. Among the Polish authors, well-known in the collection, were Mikołaj of Błonie, Maciej Miechowita (Maciej of Miechów), Stanislaus Hosius, Jan Baliński, Johannes Dantiscus, Jan of Głogów, Grzegorz of Szamotuły, Jan of Tuchola, Jan of Stobnica, Mikołaj Jaskier, and Andrzej Krzycki.

A characteristic feature of the Renaissance theologians and thinkers was their involvement in the public sphere, which was reflected in numerous texts of occasional literature that often treated about then contemporary Polish and European social and political sphere. A significant number of those works is devoted to the events at the royal court, and thus they are dedicated to the king, as well as to secular and clerical dignitaries. Moreover, speeches and orations, which were delivered on ceremonial occasions in the local and European environment, were published at that time as well. Furthermore, epithalamiums and funeral speeches were created; coronations and battle victories were celebrated; threats like a war with Turkey or religious themes were taken up. Paweł of Krosno wrote an epithalamium in honor of Jan Lubrański, a bishop of Poznań, and extolled the marriage ceremony of Sigismund I the Old with Barbara Zápolya. Moreover, he eulogized the victory of Sigismund I the Old in the battle of Orsza and the victory over Moscow. In 1515 Paweł of Krosno had a poem “Carmina” published, which was created on the occasion of the First Congress of Vienna. Piotr Rozjusz, for example, eulogized the marriage between Sigismund II Augustus and Elisabeth of Austria. Other themes concerned the death of Sigismund I the Old.

On January 1, 1530, Romolo Quirino Amaseo (1489–1552), an alumnus of the University of Mantova, in his oration De pace delivered in Bologna to the pope and the emperor, summoned to peace that would favor combined operations against Turks, especially after they instigated to fight against the House of Habsburg in 1529. Turks conquered Belgrade, Rhodes, and finally Hungary, which made Turkish invasion a real threat to Europe divided by the French versus Empire conflict. Imperial hegemony led to alliance between France, Venice, Duchy of Milan, and the pope, which aimed to resist imperial rule in Italy.

In 1527 its army conquered and plundered Rome, and Pope Clement VII was imprisoned in the Castle of the Holy Angel. In 1529 a treaty of Cambrai was signed, whose benefits fell to Charles V. Characteristically, Charles V generously rewarded an Italian humanist for his speech with 300 ducats, among others, which supported Charles’s interests. On February 24, 1529 the pope crowned Charles V a Caesar, on which occasion Amaseo delivered two more orations. Another author, a Greek poet Andronicus Tranquilius Parthenius, retreated from Constantinople to Italy in 1453. Afterwards he departed for Brazil where he taught Greek, and after that to Paris. Andronicus Tranquilius Parthenius first arrived in Poland in 1512 in the retinue of primate Jan Łaski. Moreover, he maintained contacts with bishops Stanislaus Hosius and Samuel Maciejowski, as well as with Seweryn Boner. In 1544 he abided at the court of castellan Andrzej Górka, who was the addresser of a letter published in 1545. In his laudation, there is also the name of Jan Tarnowski, at whose place the poet resided afterwards. The other letter is addressed “Ad optimates Polonos admonition.” An interesting document depicting passages to Moscow as part of diplomatic mission was penned by Siegmund Freiherr von Herberstein. These texts constitute a unique and remarkably compelling panorama of the contemporary world, both because of the authors and recipients.

The Rules of Editing

In terms of language, the analyzed collection is predominantly written in Latin (257 titles), 12 titles are rendered in Polish, whereas three in German, which proves the increasing influence exerted by the humanistic ideas, along with the emphasis on literature rendered in national languages²⁹. Hieronim Wetor said: “thus I ventured so the Polish writing spread due to my own work and a considerable effort to the honor and fame of the renowned Polish Crown³⁰. This regularity is also visible on prints that derive from Polish or European printing houses. Cracow prevailed (216 titles), while other printing houses were from Württemberg, Vienna, Venice, Leipzig, and Nuremberg. Few prints came from Königsberg, Augsburg, Basel, Strasbourg, Mainz, and Köln. A multitude of these printing houses proves the reception and access in the Republic of Poland of literature published abroad, as well as emphasizes a prominent role the center in Cracow performed in the golden age of printing. In general, the present catalogue contains records of 275 prints from the 1st half of the 16th century, stored in the Vasyl Stefanyk National Scientific Library of Ukraine. Subsequent volumes are being prepared, that is, a catalogue of prints from the second half of the 16th century, as well as content and formal description of the collection from the 16th century³¹, illustrated against the history of the library and cultural trends of the Renaissance, as well as the 19th century. The idea to conduct the research and publish the catalogue was undertaken by Jolanta Gwioździk.

The basis for the research was the reconstruction of a historical part of the collection, along with its diagnosis, documentation, description, and an in-depth, multifaceted analysis. The methodology consisted in separating the 16th-century prints, based on the extant catalogues³² and bookplates, which was hindered by defective bookplates as well as the physical condition of the collection (damaged copies, with no title pages or first or final pages, with indecipherable notes on their provenience). The research was conducted in the Special Collections Department of the Lviv National Vasyl Stefanyk Scientific Library of Ukraine and supervised by Olha Kolosowska. Next, a catalogue of prints was compiled (by Jolanta Gwioździk and Iwona Pietrzkiewicz), which was done in accordance with the norm PN-N-01152-8 Bibliographic description. Old prints. Entries form was standardized by Renata Frączek, according to thesaurus Heritage of the Printed Book Database (HPB). A picture of the title page was added to description (phot. Tadeusz Maciąg). The information on the analyzed old prints was checked with regard to its occurrence in basic Polish and world sources of information (91 searched traditional and electronic sources) by Renata Frączek and Tadeusz Maciąg. The main electronic source of information used in bibliographic citations were the following: the Heritage of the Printed Book database (HPB), Karlsruher Virtuelle Katalog (KVK), Bielefeld Academic Search Engine (BASE), central catalogue: National, Academic & Specialist Library Catalogue (COPAC), and Gateway to Library Catalogues, whose software enables the sequential search through over 300 world catalogues and databases in the Library of Congress, as well as The European Library – whose web portal provides access to the national European libraries. Indexing lists in bibliographic and catalogue sources point to their presence in the Polish and European cultural heritage. The vast number of titles was recorded by traditional bibliographies and catalogues, predominantly, Estricher's bibliography (256 entries), Bibliographia Polonica (203) and a Catalogue of Old Prints of the National Ossoliński Institute (170). The electronic catalogue of the National Library (BNPOL) contains 127 records; HPB – 72; COPAC – 56 were identified; GBV databases – 51 entries; BVB – 44 entries, WorldCat – 53. Among digital libraries the greatest number of entries were found in Lower Silesia Digital Library (DBC), then in Wielkopolska Digital Library (14 records), and Silesian Digital Library (ŚBC) – 13.

An outline of the history of the collection, as well as its reception, is implicit in bookplates, especially when they illustrate some excerpts of collections, either secular or religious ones, whose record, along with the localization and an attempt at dating, are included in the comments part of the catalogue, as well as very frequently elaborate marginalia. Most of the analyzed old prints come from Wiktor Baworowski's and Zygmunt Czarnecki of Rusko's collections, and are depicted in the form of stamps, ex libris, or supraexlibra. Similarly applied was ex libris of the Library of Count Wiktor Baworowski Foundation, compiled and elaborated in a form of an oval stamp by an engraver Eugeniusz Unger from Lviv. The engraving said: BIBLIOTH[eca] BAVOROVIANA LEOPOLIEN[sis], z herbem Wilczekosy (BIBLIOTH[eca] BAVOROVIANA LEOPOLIEN[sis] Wilczekosy coat of arms)³³. The last element of description is the cover. A vast number of prints were bound at the turn of the 19th and 20th centuries, which was most probably the result of splitting the original bookbinding blocks. Old covers were partially damaged; others were under conservation work. Only 10% of covers come from the epoch. Boards, and light and dark brown leather prevailed. They were ornamented with plaques and engravings, and traces of buckle fasteners.

Along with the work on the preparation of the catalogue, works on microbiological and physico-chemical analysis were carried on by Tadeusz Maciąg, who claimed that the collection was not microbiologically threatened, the paper was in good condition, and storage conditions require special care on the part of the librarians. The collection also shows traces of its history, which can be perceived in spillage blots, spots, partial burning, mechanical and microbiological damage to the pages and cover. The performed analysis places special focus upon about 20% of the collection, which should be subject to conservation and binding works.

The elaboration of the 16th-century collection of prints certainly proves its unique value for the mental culture of the old, as well as today's Lviv. At the same time, this collection testifies its meaning and the role of the Polish history and culture of the bygone ages, which now comprise an element of our common heritage. Therefore, we present the readers with this catalogue, en tibi candide Lector.

► Opatów, monastery founded in 1470; Church of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary; dissolution in 1865; school for monks. The Library collected about 1500 volumes; some part of the collection was bequeathed to Warsaw and Sandomierz – 27

► Poznań (Conventus Posnaniensis Patrum Reformatorum), founded in 1657; dedicated to St. Casimir; dissolution in 1804 – 32

Ordo Fratrum Minorum de Observantia

► Polish Province of the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary (Provincia Poloniae Ordinis Minorum Regularis Observantiae S.P. Francisci sub titulo Sanctae Mariae Virginis), since 1453, numbered 19 convents, se studium generale – 148

Ordo Sancti Benedicti

► Koszyce, abbey (Monasterii Cassoviensis), founded in 1143 – 56

► Lubiń (Librorum Monasterii Lubinensis, Conventus Lubinensis Ordinis Sancti Benedicti) abbey of the Birth of the Blessed Virgin Mary, founded in ca 1070; in the years 1588–1604 a reform was introduced; school; dissolution in 1834. The Library had over 5.5 thousand volumes – 80, 217

Ordo Sancti Pauli Primi Eremitae

- Częstochowa – Luminous Mountain (Domus Clari Montis) fundation since 1382; representative library collecting 13 thousand volumes; in 1614 it counted 1610 volumes – 97

Pelser Joannes (activity 1554) – 49

Petrus Lew[def] see Lew.[def] Piotr

Podlecki W. (19th c.) – 111

Polger Andreas (16th c.) – 49

EVALUATION OF THE PRESERVATION CONDITION OF PRINTS FROM THE YEARS 1500–1550

Assumptions and research methods

Books are a product of human thought and skills, an important element of the cultural heritage: they attest to an intellectual and spiritual development of society, they are a carrier of ideas, and a source of scientific and literary creative power. Stories about the past of the nation are committed to their pages, as well as about its economy, culture, and politics. At the same time books constitute an element of the material culture since they have been recorded on a specific medium. The basic “building” material of books is paper; its usage is dominant because of easiness of preparation and low cost of production. Historic paper is a product formed on a wire mesh (called a wire) from water slurry of plant fibres, whose essential ingredient is cellulose¹. This compound is a natural polymer and, like all compounds of this type, is subject to the process of natural aging. The term ‘paper aging’ should be understood as the changes to physical, chemical and mechanical properties occurring during the period of paper storage and use which lead to the shortening of paper durability. In the process of aging, two stages can be distinguished:

- paper making (raw materials used in paper production)
- paper use (impact of external factors).

Considering the phenomenon of paper durability for its chemical composition, we have to take into account quantitative and qualitative changes in the cellulose fibres, lignin content in the paper, presence of acidic substances and various ancillary products used in paper production. The external conditions, which have an impact on the natural process of paper aging, include: atmospheric, physical and biological factors.

The atmospheric factors are components of the atmosphere: oxygen, nitrogen, ozone, carbon dioxide, water vapour and air pollutants. Polluting substances are divided into two groups. The first group comprises solids, such as: soot and tar particles, volatile ashes, and metal oxides particles. The second group consists of gases: carbon monoxide, chlorine compounds, aldehydes, and – particularly dangerous to the durability of paper – nitrogen oxides, sulphur dioxide and ozone. The physical factors include the impact of thermal energy, magnetic field, and radioactive substances. During the process of natural aging, the aforementioned factors contribute to the occurrence of such chemical reactions as hydrolysis, oxidation, changes in the transverse bonds, changes in the level of crystallinity, photolysis, photosensitization and photo-oxidation of cellulose².

A significant number of changes occurring during the process of natural aging of paper cause its acidification, which adversely affects its structural and mechanical properties. Acid hydrolysis of cellulose leads to shortening the cellulose chain length, which translates to its mechanical strength; moreover, on two ends of the broken polymer chain, there are reactive groupings present, which easily attach to adjacent cellulose chain causing its degradation. This causes an increase in the stiffness of the paper, which becomes brittle and falls apart when touched. The presence of positively charged ions of hydrogen (H^+), responsible for the acidification of the environment, catalyses the hydrolysis of cellulose³.

Under the influence of acidification, paper changes its optical properties: its brightness decreases and discoloration occurs. Determination of the degree of paper acidification allows for obtaining basic knowledge about the current preservation condition of the collection, which helps to make an appropriate decision regarding the scope of conservation intervention. Therefore, the determination of the degree of paper acidification is the basic chemical test carried out on the paper substance.

The acidification is determined applying the hydrogen ion exponent pH that is a negative logarithm of the hydrogen ion concentration expressed in moles per litre⁴. For water and aqueous solutions characterized by the same concentration of ions $[H^+]$ and $[OH^-]$, the pH equals 7. With such a pH the solution is neutral, whereas the solution whose $pH > 7$ is an alkaline solution, and the one whose $pH < 7$ is acid.

Measurement of the pH can be carried out in several ways⁵. Nowadays conservators have a non-invasive contact method of determining the value of pH⁶, which allows them to take measurements on the book page without the need to sample any material from it. This type of measurement causes no protests on the part of conservators. The measurement of pH is possible thanks to the measurement instrument called the pH-meter. For the purpose of practical measurements of the pH, a complex electrode was used which consists of two electrodes placed in one encapsulation.

A basic physical test for historic paper, used in order to assess the extent to which books and documents have been damaged, is the double fold number (DFN), which determines the folding endurance of paper. The double fold number can be determined in two ways: manual and mechanical⁷. The mechanical method was applied by a pioneer of research into the durability of paper W.J. Barrow, who classified paper into 5 durability groups on the basis of the method⁸. The manual method was utilized by Dutch researchers⁹. The double fold number still constitutes an important dynamic endurance feature of paper, in particular when the DFN is established manually.

The evaluation of the collection preservation condition solely on the basis of an assessment of the condition of paper is perforce incomplete. A method, which offers a larger number of parameters taken into consideration when evaluating the collection condition, is the Stanford method¹⁰. It is employed for the statistical evaluation of the preservation condition of books and periodicals. In the Stanford method, the assessment criteria refer separately to: paper, bulk of book and book cover. Qualification of the condition of paper constitutes a decisive factor in evaluation. In regard to paper, qualification involves visual inspection of the material and a manual test of its corners carried out by folding them six times (one folding action consists in deflecting a corner 360° in both directions) and, after having unfolded the corner level with the plane of the leaf, subjecting it to pulling. Should the corner break off as a result of the exerted pull, the print automatically qualifies for the third category.

Cumulative assessment of these three criteria allows for classifying a given copy into one of three categories. Category 1 contains prints in the best condition, category 2 includes prints requiring the conservator's intervention, and category 3 comprises prints in very bad condition that should be excluded from dissemination.

In evaluation of the bulk of book, the degree of damage to the sewing or gluing is taken into consideration, as well as the leaf attachment resulting from it. An object undergoing an analysis may be classified into one of 3 following groups:

“Group I:

- Sewing/gluing – intact.
- Leaves – firmly attached.

Group II

- Sewing/gluing – loose, but compact.
- Leaves – may be loosely attached to the bulk, but they do not fall out.

Group III

- Sewing/gluing – damaged.
- Leaves – loose, falling out from the bulk.”

When evaluating the book cover, its durability and overall preservation condition of its surface are taken into consideration. In this respect, copies being examined are classified into 3 groups:

“Group I

- Cover – firmly bound with the bulk.
- Hinges – undamaged.
- Corners – undamaged.
- Spine – undamaged.
- Cover lining – undamaged.
- Repairs – lack.

Group II

- Cover – permanently attached to the bulk.
- Hinges – damaged.

- Corners – slightly damaged.
- Spine – slightly damaged, cracked.
- Cover lining – worn.
- Repairs – none or few.

Group III

- Cover – one or both torn off.
- Hinges – damaged, requiring repair.

The interpretation of the print evaluation results have been shown in Table 1¹¹.

Evaluation of Preservation of Prints from the Years 1500–1550

The Count Victor Baworowski library collection in the Lviv National Vasyl Stefanyk Scientific Library of Ukraine (LNSL) includes 257 prints issued during the period under consideration. The examination of their preservation condition was carried out with the application of the Stanford method; additionally, their pH was determined and they were rated in microbiological terms. The evaluation was performed on all the volumes registered in the Catalogue. Figure 1 below presents the structure of the evaluated sample.

The preservation condition of prints according to the Stanford method

As a result of the examination carried out using the Stanford method, the prints were classified into particular categories of preservation condition (see Figure 2):

- Category 1 – 34 copies, which represent 13.22% of the whole sample
- Category 2 – 176 copies, which represent 68.48% of the whole sample
- Category 3 – 47 copies, which represent 18.28% of the whole sample

The results show that almost 87% of the volumes are not in the best preservation condition and require the conservator's intervention, and that about 20% among them should already be excluded from dissemination.

Performed during the evaluation, the manual folding test, which consists in six-time folding of a paper corner, is a good means for checking paper endurance. Breaking off of the examined corner suggests that the paper is weak and needs to be strengthened urgently. The paper in only 10 prints, i.e. 3.89 % of the collection undergoing the examination, failed to pass the manual folding test satisfactorily.

Figure 3 compares the number of books in particular decades, from which paper failed to pass the manual folding test successfully, with books from Category 3. It clearly shows that, in terms of mechanical strength, the paper is in very good condition and the main factors determining its belonging to the third category are: severe paper yellowing, numerous rips and fragments missing, damaged and worn edges as well as corners.

The degree of collection acidification

In order to measure the degree of paper acidification in the tested objects the pH has been determined using the non-destructive contact method applying Elmetron CX-741 pH-meter with a combination electrode of the OSH10-00 type and the option to automatically determine the end of measurement. Figure 3 shows the degree of collection acidification.

The pH was tested in each copy taking into consideration 8 points. Five points were set on the title page, 4 of which were located in the corners of the title leaf, and one in the middle. The other three measurements were made on randomly selected leaves in the middle of the bulk of book, two on the unprinted area and one on the printed area. The tested collection is slightly acidified (see Figure 4).

measured on the title leaf and the middle of the bulk. Moreover, the average pH between particular decades was compared in order to determine the dynamics of change of this ratio over a given period. The variation in acidification between sub-periods is small. The lowest pH was determined in sub-periods 1500–1510, 1541–1550, and it amounted to 6.57, and the lowest pH was in the sub-period 1511–1520 (pH 6.75).

Microbiological evaluation

Improper storage conditions of library collections in the past, and especially excessive level of humidity, caused a significant part of the preserved library collections to have traces of microbiological damage. The living organisms, which have a destructive influence on collections, include: insects, rodents, bacteria, and – above all – fungi, commonly known as “moulds”. In the place, where the mycelium grows, and also far beyond it, paper gets destroyed. It becomes brittle, thin, porous, and finally – as a result of polymer degradation – its cellulose particles fall apart and losses in the structure appear¹².

In order to assess the risk of microbiological threat to a library collection, what must be determined is the viability of spores. In favourable conditions (e.g. moisture in the collection), they can develop quickly and destroy the basis on which exist¹³.

The evaluation of microbiological risk has been carried out on printed documents, which showed

Only 13 objects have an average pH below 6 (see Figure 5 and Annex – The Degree of Collection Acidification). The lowest measured pH was 5.26 (object 10) and the highest 7.78 (object 48). No significant statistical differences were discovered between the pH clear traces of microorganism activity in the form of all kinds of dye penetration, stains, seepage, dirt, and deformation. 41 books have been chosen as subjects of evaluation. Samples have been taken from all the subjects and tested for the presence of filamentous fungi. Each volume was described using two microbiological samples. The first one was collected from either a front fly-leaf or a title leaf, and the second one – from the middle of the bulk. The examination consisted in pressing a wet sterile tissue disc, 4 cm in diameter, against the places where the activity of microorganisms was clearly visible. Then the sterile tissue was placed in a Petri dish, 12 cm in diameter, containing nutrient medium in the quantity of 10 cm³, prepared according to the Czapek Dox formula¹⁴. The dish was then incubated at the temperature of 2°C.

In order to assess the microbiological risks, it was assumed that the optimal period of time, after which the mycelium should overgrow the entire inside of the dish, would be 21 days. It was also assumed that should mycelium of 3 cm in diameter develop within seven days of incubation, it would mean the highest degree of risk because of the presence of living mycelium in the examined material. The growth of the mycelium up to 6 cm in diameter after 14 days of incubation was classified as the medium degree of risk, which would mean the execution of preventive disinfectant treatments. Incomplete and uneven growth of the living mycelium over the dish after 21 days of incubation would confirm the presence of inactive spore forms¹⁵.

It was discovered that microbial infection is not uniformly located. Most of the colonies developed in dishes, which contained samples taken from fly-leaves or title leaves, and much fewer on samples from the middle of the bulk of book. In the former type of samples 25 growths developed, and in the latter 9 (see Table 3).

The microbiological control carried out revealed that out of the number of 41 subjects, 26 showed signs of fungal infection in at least one of two examination points. There were 18 copies, which developed a fungal colony at one examination point, 8 with two points, and in 15 copies the growth did not occur at all.

In general, a good assessment of the preservation condition of the collection is affected by the fact that out of the number of 41 volumes only 5 cases were recorded in which fungal growth zone amounted to 3 cm in diameter after seven days of incubation, which represents 12.1% of all subjects. This provides evidence of the presence of living mycelium in the biological material. In such a situation, the whole volume shall be classified for immediate conservation intervention. The number of objects with advanced forms of fungal diseases not exceeding 25% of the entire collection proves that the development of mycelium in the conditions the test copies were stored was considerably limited (see Table 4).

Table 4. Evaluation of risks of fungal origin

	Degree of risk
	xxx	xx	x	Lack of growth on the nutrient medium
bulk of book	0	0	9	32
fly-leaf or title leaf	5	4	18	14

Designations: xxx — highest degree of risk, within 7 days of incubation the mycelium is formed with a diameter of 3 cm; xx – medium degree of risk, within 14 days of incubation the mycelium is formed with a diameter of 6 cm; x – low degree of risk, after 21 days of incubation small size mycelium (of the order of a few millimetres) is formed irregularly and unevenly in the dish.

Microbiological risk assessment was supplemented by qualitative analysis of micro-organisms. The tested mushrooms included up to eight types: Cladosporium, Aspergillus sp., Penicillium sp., Alternaria Alternata, Mucor sp., Trichoderma sp., Scopulariopsis sp., Botryotrichum sp.

As a result of the examination of prints issued during the years 1500-1550, it was discovered that 18.28% of tested books are in poor condition, require book-binding and conservation intervention, and are not suitable for lending. The vast majority of the collection undergoing examination (68%) belonged to group 2 and required bookbinding intervention. Other books were classified into Group 1, that is books in very good condition. The vast majority of test prints does not require deacidification. This procedure should only be performed on 13 copies, for which the average pH of paper amounted to did not exceed 6. Taking into account the microbiological risk, the examined volumes were not compromised.
